Introduction:-

Stress is a state of mind that reflects certain reactions in the human body and is experienced by a sense of being caused by such demands of the environment or internal process that cannot be met by the resources available or mental to the person. Stress is anything that changes physical, emotional, behavioural, mental state.

In today's changing and competitive world both in the workforce as well as the managers as a result of this work stress more and more workforce and managers are showing signs of chronic setting. In the most cases stress tends to reduce productivity. Stress is highly individual in nature. Some people have high tolerance for stress and thrive well in high or severe stressors in the environment, some individuals will not perform well unless they experience a level of stress which motivates them to do better. On the other hand some people have very low level of tolerance for stress and they show signs of other work is exposed to tension and anxiety as they get through the duties assigned to them.
